

Fuse Research Event

Peer research: sharing best practice and developing a community of practice

Tuesday 18 January 2023, 11 am until 3 pm (including lunch)

Gala Theatre, Durham, DH1 1WA

Peer research enables practitioners and community members to become actively involved in research to directly affect the outcomes. They add an 'authentic' voice to research and foster closer collaborations between academics and those impacted by the research findings.

This event will explore what we can learn from current practices in the North East and North Cumbria and how can we support more people to get involved in peer research.

What will I gain from this?

This joint event between Fuse and the NIHR Applied Research Collaboration (ARC) North East and North Cumbria (NENC) showcases examples of good practice of peer research within our region. Together we will share resources, identify key ingredients and gaps, and explore how we could address these gaps. At the event, we will launch a Community of Practice for peer researchers and those interested in peer research to take forward action points from the event.

Who is it for?

Anyone and everyone who is interested in peer research from a public health perspective, including academic researchers, health and care professionals, community and voluntary sector staff and community members.

Programme and registration will be available on the 'Events' page of the Fuse website www.fuse.ac.uk
